

Third, the sheer enormity of the kid's self-defense. The house is huge, which means that defending it must have been no easy task, but Kevin was smart enough not only to be able to do it but also to come up with a lot of different working traps. The action of the traps can be compared in comicality to the animated series "Tom and Jerry", from where the film takes its origins and black humor. And yet, we should not forget that this is a family comedy, which means that evil according to the classics should be punished. In the end, the robbers fail and Kevin is reunited with his family.
